Before the United States Circuit Court was called to order yesterday morning, and Judges Bond and Hughes occupied the bench, it was whispered in the crowd of assembled lawyers that counsel had agreed on that these nominations had been made and confirmed by the Court, there was but little excitement. The Judge, however, seemed to be somewhat moved by tender emotions when he uttered the voice of the Court, which relieved General Mahone from a posimany desperate battles before courts and in legislative halls and committee-rooms. PERSONAL EXPLANATION. On Monday, in discussing the payment of wages to laborers, Judge Shipman said: "What I do charge the other side with is not with unselfishness that they did not pay the laborers, but for their impudence in denouncing us because we did not leave that clause in our bill, especially in view of the fact that they have paid $400,000 in some way, and have not paid them."

Yesterday Judge Shipman, addressing the Court, stated that he had been informed that the word "impudence," as used by him, was construed by some as referring to Judge Robertson. He could not leave the city without correcting that impression. For his good brother Robertson he entertained the greatest respect and affection. The word was used in a moment of excitement, and he begged leave to take it back and cancel it, and to substitute "ungraciousness" for "impudence."

Judge Robertson said that he was engaged when Judge Shipman's remark was made, and did not hear it; and when told of it couldthe schooner J. B.
